re-election four years hence is no doubt music of the most charming kind to Mr. Fairbanks, and this knowledge will give him a long period in which to set his traps for the coveted prize. Mr. Fairbanks was a very anxious candidate for the presidential honors until, much to his chagrin, he discovered that there was no earthly chance for him, and re lustantly fell into the Roosevelt line, but declared he would not accept the second place on the ticket. Time passed on and when the convention assembled he was forced on the ticket just as Mr. Roosevelt had been four years before. Had Mr. McKinley the force on the ticket is survey and did so, although the armed its surv lived his term out, Mr. Roosevelt would have been his legitimate successor, but hedid not, and Mr. Roose-secured it without bloodshed. velt became President. Now, as he retires after his next term, Mr. Fairbanks will likely be regarded by his Governor Breaks Record for Brief party as the President's legitimate successor. So it looks as if the vice
